72. “The Arab Tent” by Edwin Landseer. This is a print of probably the finest painting of horses that Edwin Landseer, the leading Victorian animal painter, ever produced. Saluki lovers will notice the two Salukis sleeping to the right side of the print on a pile of Persian rugs and a leopard skin.

Edwin Landseer (1802-1873) was the most popular English animal painter of the nineteenth century. He specialised in dogs and deer, though he also painted other animals as well as landscapes and several portraits. Greatly admired by Queen Victoria, who gave him many commissions, he was knighted in 1850. Although not dated, The Arab Tent was no doubt painted shortly before it was shown at the 1866 Royal Academy exhibition. It shows an arab mare and her foal resting on an eastern carpet with two Salukis whose sleek and graceful heads wittily echo the heads of the horses. At the top of the composition two monkeys, including one wearing an ear-ring and clutching an orange, lie among palm fronds. The pipes in the turquoise jar and the smoking brazier suggest that the animals' owner is not far away. The picture is unusual among Landseer's works in showing an oriental scene. The precise nationality of the tent and its occupants, however, has been the subject of some confusion. The picture was first exhibited as Mare and Foal - Indian Tent, but it was soon called The Arab Tent and none of the objects shown in it seems to be Indian. Print is approximately 22 x 32 inches and is unframed.

116. Saluki figurine. This is a beautifully detailed resin sculpture of a standing Saluki. Please note the left front foot is missing - but even so he continues to stand up - rather like the injured dogs we get into rescue who carry on so well and go on to live happy lives in spite of what they have to overcome. From the front, you don't notice his damage at all, and he still makes a handsome addition to a Saluki fancier's collection.

The beads are faceted black glass with tiny peacock blue beads between each one. A floral silver toggle clasp completes this design. The pendant alone is just under 2 inches long and 1.25 inches at the widest point. The entire necklace is 18 inches long. The photo does not begin to do justice to this piece!
